

Biography

Edward H. Offerman

Mr. Offerman assumed Command of DCM Raytheon Technical Services Company in July 1997 when it was known as DCMC Indianapolis - Hughes Air Warfare Center. He is responsible for overall leadership and management of the DCM office at the Raytheon Technical Services Company, including budget, staffing, facilities, and IRM requirements. He reports directly to the DCM Indianapolis Commander, who reports to the East District

Commander. The HAWC was established as a result of the BRAC decision to privatize the Naval Air Warfare Center (NAWC) and the subsequent award of a $1.5 billion contract to Hughes to perform the work of the former NAWC. Mr. Offerman was the DCMC member on the Navy BRAC Transition Team assigned to the contracts sub-team for early CAS. The privatization of the NAWC is the largest to date in the federal government and its success is cited as a model for Acquisition Reform throughout the DoD.
